This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE

This somewhat sketchy account of the Trezevant family in America has been to me a labor of love, and an agreeable employment for idle hours during the past eighteen years. My investigations included a journey to Maintenon, the French village from whence the family fled to America. I found that during the wars of the French Revolution all records, civil and religious, of that immediate section were entirely destroyed, and in consequence the oldest records of the family available commence in the year 1685 at Charleston, S. C., with the signature of Daniel Trezevant affixed to his oath of allegiance to King James.

While I have made free use of all historical data available, this record could not have been completed but for the invaluable aid rendered me by Mr. A. S. Salley, Jr., formerly Secretary of South Carolina Historical Society, now Secretary of the Historical Commission of South Carolina. His intimate knowledge of the genealogy of many of the Huguenot families of South Carolina, his love of and untiring zeal in the prosecution of genealogical studies, has entitled him to the thanks of all who are interested in the preservation of histories of Huguenot families of South Carolina.

I dedicate this little work to my daughter, Eva Whitthorne Trezevant, just now entering into womanhood, with the hope that when she is old enough to appreciate the value of a grandfather, the contemplation of six generations of honorable ancestors will develop a fine sense of "noblesse oblige." For all these years since 1685 the women of the family have been gentlewomen, and the men have borne an honorable and conspicuous part in the life of their day, whether as planters, lawyers, judges, physicians, clergymen, merchants or politicians, and as soldiers have shed their blood in every war. I feel that I can be justly proud of a family that for this length of time has lived along lines of the best traditions of democracy and wrought to its full strength in the upbuilding of a nation which promises more of freedom and happiness than mankind has enjoyed since the dawn of time.

FOREWORD

It is not my intention in this brief article to repeat the history of Protestantism in France, nor to review at length the events which preceded the massacre of Saint Bartholomew, nor to detail the events from that day of horrible bloodshed to the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Suffice it to say that on August 24, 1572, which was St. Bartholomew's Day, took place that dreadful massacre which has retained a prominent place in history as "The Massacre of St. Bartholomew's". Inspired by the malignant hate of the Queen Mother (Catharine de Medici) King Charles IX finally yielded to her importunities and agreed to the massacre. Admiral Coligny, the greatest living Protestant of that date (outside of some of the reigning princes) was slain. All the chief Huguenots were murdered. The slaughter was of such magnitude as is almost impossible to conceive of from the standpoint of the civilization of the twentieth century. Then followed twenty years of the Wars of the League, as the four civil wars of that period were called, with Henry of Navarre as the nominal head of the Protestant religionists, a large portion of whom in France were Huguenots. Henry of Navarre, in 1593, finding that he could never achieve his highest aim (King of France) as a Huguenot, avowed Catholicism. Immediately he became the favorite of all France, especially of Paris. Naturally the Huguenots became somewhat lukewarm, and in April, 1598, he issued the famous Edict of Nantes, which secured to the Huguenots their position of liberty for the next ninety years. They got toleration of their opinions, might worship openly in all places (except a few small towns), were qualified to hold office in financial posts, and in the law, had a Protestant chamber in the parliament, and were given, peacefully, rights such as they had not known prior to that time, except by force. Over twenty-five years before the revocation of this edict Louis XIV, under the artful tutelage of Madame de Maintenon, and the more fanatical of the Romish clergy, began a series of persecutions which are incomprehensible at this distance, and which finally culminated in the revocation of this edict which gave comparative freedom to the Protestants. Decree after decree was issued by Louis XIV, each being more restrictive of the privileges then enjoyed by the Huguenots. As early as 1662, twenty-three out of the twenty-five churches on the border of Switzerland, where the Protestants comprised a majority of the population, were shut up by order of the court. By edict, employments which hitherto had furnished them support were denied them, and they were excluded successively from all civil and municipal charges, from being receivers of taxes, officers of mints, magistrates, notaries, advocates, the professions were commanded to repell them, they were forbidden to practice as physicians or surgeons, or to exercise the functions of printers, booksellers, etc. In 1681 the Council of State suppressed the Protestant Academy which Coligny had founded at Chatillon-sur-Loing; and the more famous academy of Sedan, which had been founded by Henry IV. In 1684 the academy of Die was suppressed. In January of the next year, the academy of Saumur, "a torch" that had "illuminated all Europe" for eighty years, was extinguished. The last of these Protestant seats of learning, the academy of Montauban, ceased to exist by an order of the Council dated the fifth of March, 1685. Then came the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, which was but the finishing stroke of a policy that had been pursued with marvelous steadiness for a quarter of a century. The licentious and bigoted Louis was evidently seeking to atone for the sins of his scandalous life, and to expiate his many crimes as well of omission as commission, by the massacre of the Protestant subjects, who were to him (under the influence of a venal priesthood) rank heretics whom to exterminate would be an act pleasing to God. The revocation of that edict alarmed all Protestant Europe and created consternation throughout France. The great historian, Macaulay, says of this event: "The final blow struck, the Edict of Nantes was revoked in October, 1685, and a crowd of decrees against Protestants appeared in rapid succession, boys and girls were torn from their parents and sent to convents to be educated in the Romish faith; Calvinistic ministers were commanded to abjure their religion or quit the country within a fortnight. The other professors of the reformed faith were forbidden to leave the kingdom, and to prevent their escape the seaports and frontiers were strictly guarded; but despite all this vigilance there was a vast emigration. It was estimated that within a few months fifty thousand Protestant families left France forever. Generally persons of industry, intelligence and austere morals, many eminent in war, science, literature and art, and a very large percentage of gentle blood."

In Baird's history of the Huguenot immigration to America, we find a large number of names that have since become famous in American history. These Huguenots, particularly those who settled on the upper Atlantic coast, were from in and about the city of La Rochele, the stronghold for two centuries of Protestantism in France. Amongst them we particularly note the names of Jay, Boudoin, Faneuil, Papin, Lucas, L'Hommedieu, Peronneau, Boudinot, Gallaudet and others, who settled in the middle and New England States. A distinguished writer has stated that the blood of the French Protestants in America mingles with the French and Scotch strains in the lineage of four presidents of the United States; it supplied New Amsterdam with its first governor, Peter Minuit; it gave Puritanism John Alden and the maiden Priscilla; it contributed to the Revolutionary cause the modest and masterful Marion, the "swamp fox" of the Carolinas; the polished Laurens, the old hero, General Herkimer, and the first American jurist, John Jay. Two of the five American Commissioners who signed the treaty of Paris, which brought peace to the colonies with the recognition of their independence, were of Huguenot lineage. And when from far Transvaal the Boers sent a delegation to negotiate a pact with the French Republic, every commissioner was a Huguenot by origin. Three of the nine presidents of the Old Congress which conducted the United States through the Revolutionary War were descendants of French Protestant refugees, who had migrated to America in consequence of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. These were Laurens of South Carolina, John Jay of New York, and Elias Boudinot of New Jersey. The Huguenot Boudoin gave to Massachusetts one of its first colleges, Bowdoin College, and the famous Faneuil Hall, "the cradle of liberty", was given by the Huguenot of that name. In South Carolina, more than any other State probably, the character of its people was influenced by the infusion of French blood and Huguenot ideas. In Ramsay's History of South Carolina, we find a list of Huguenot names arriving in Charles Town about 1685 and 1686, as follows:

Bonneau, Bounetheau, Bordeaux, Benoist, Boiseau, Bocquet, Bacot, Chevalier, Cordes, Couturier, Chastaignier, DuPré, DuBose, DuBois, DeVeaux, DuTarque, DeLesseline, Douxsaint, DuPont, DuBordeaux, Faucheraud, Foissin, Fayssoux, Gaillard, Gendron, Gignilliat, Guerard, Godin, Girardeau, Guerin, Gourdin, Horry, Huger, Jeannerette, Legaré, Laurens, LaRoche, Lenud, Marion, Mazÿck, Manigault, Mouzon, Michau, Prioleau, Peronneau, Perdriau, Porcher, Peyre, Poyas, Ravenel, Royer, Simons, St. Julien, Serre, Trezevant. No one familiar with South Carolina history can avoid the conclusion that the sons of those men were responsible for much of the history of the glorious old Palmetto State; that they incurred almost incredible hardships in their efforts to escape from France is matter of common history, but they esteemed no sacrifice too great which would enable them to earn for themselves liberty of conscience.

The Huguenot came not from choice; he was content in France, devoted to his country. its institutions, its sunny climate, its delightful homes,—France, the most enlightened country of the 17th Century, appealed to him far more than did the unbroken wilderness of America. An authority on the subject says: "The Huguenots who came to America were men of remarkable ability and exceptional mental and moral worth, of absolute allegiance to their faith, and to the rights of humanity, while the women were refined, domestic in their tastes, competent and capable in the management of their households, beautiful in physique and graceful in personal bearing. Thus it was that there was a high and peculiar type of French blood infused into the American Colonists' life, with the most beneficial results to the young and undeveloped country. The introduction of this blood had a great result. It produced a far finer type of moral and religious life; it softened the austere nature of the Puritan of New England; it mingled with the Dutch blood in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, resulting in a far more graceful bearing, without lessening the sturdy character of the Hollander; it served to check the somewhat careless life of the Cavaliers of Virginia, and thus it was that the spirituality of the Huguenot emigrants leavened, as it were, the whole lump of American civilization, and added that element of strength and refinement, that faculty of prescience and detachment which was of vast aid to the colonists in mapping out the scheme of state and federal government, preserving its fervor and genius, and eliminating much of that sordid selfishness which is too apt to be the dominant characteristic of a new people. The students of American institutions have long admitted that this commingling of Huguenot blood with that of England and Holland produced a race which neither country would have generated had either been the sole colonist of America.

"Let us who are of the blood and faith never forget that despite sorrow and suffering for five hundred years, the Huguenot has faithfully adhered to that motto which his ancestors inscribed upon their banners when the 15th century was young: 'FIDE ET FORTITUDINAS'; for today, tomorrow and forever it is only by faith and fortitude that we can come off victors in that great battle of life, in which the post of honor is apt to be the private station."[1]

FAMILY

Daniel Trezevant, the founder of the well known Trezevant family of South Carolina, was one of the French Huguenots who fled from France shortly before the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685. Tradition is, he fled to England and thence to South Carolina. With him came his wife Susanne (Maulard) and son Daniel. They settled at Orange Quarter. Their names appear on the "Liste des François et Suisses", settled in Charles Town, on the Santee and at Orange Quarter, made up between May 17, 1694, and September 27, 1695,[1] with a view to naturalization, and in the Act for naturalizing aliens, passed March 10, 1697. He was a native of Authon, Perche, and a son of Theodore and Susan (Menou) Trezevant. He died in 1726.[2]

The time of his arrival is very closely approximated by the fact that at the time all immigrants were required to take the oath of allegiance to King James and his subjects, the Lords

[1]The original document was long in possession of the late Daniel Ravenel, of Charleston. It was first published in The Southern Intelligencer in 1822 and was republished in the City Gazette and Commercial Daily Advertiser (Charleston, S. C.), Monday, May 15, 1826. In 1868 Mr. Ravenel published it in pamphlet form, and in 1888 Dr. Theodore Gaillard Thomas, of New York, republished it in pamphlet form.

The date of this MS is thus ascertained: It contains the name of a child, Marianne Mazÿck, who was born in Carolina, May 17, 1694, and died September 27, 1695, as shown by her father's (Isaac Mazÿck's) family Bible. She was buried in the Huguenot Church yard.

The following are the Trezevant records, as shown by the pamphlets: "121. Daniel Trezevant, fils de Théodore Trezevant et de Susanne Menou, natif d'Authon en Perche et Susanne Maulard sa femme, natif de Chanseuille en Bause, province en France, fillie de Lubin Maulard et de Gabrielle Berou."—Page 31, 1868 ed., p. 63, 1888 ed. "129. Daniel Trezevant, fils de Daniel Trezevant et de Susanne Maulard, natif Menthenon, province de Gaule en France."—Ibid.

A copy of his will made in 1726 is printed herein, and marked Exhibit A. His will shows that he was still possessed with European ideas of primogeniture. His entire estate went to his son Isaac, except he gave to his son Theodore one English shilling, to his daughter Marian one English shilling, and to his daughter Madalane one English shilling. As the result of this will, his son Theodore started out in life penniless, but as his father was a planter he evidently adopted that calling. He died in 1732 while he was still a young man, after having accumulated a small estate which was offered for sale, seven years after his death, by the executor. (See footnote 7.) The family tradition is (I give this for what it is worth) that the administrator mismanaged the estate, and when the plantation was sold in 1739 the children were penniless.

[2]The will of Daniel Trezevant, of the parish of St. Thomas and St. Denis, Berkeley County, Province of South Carolina, dated January 29, 1725/6; proved January 3, 1726/27, mentions his sons, Isaac (to whom he gave his property) and Theodore; his daughters, Marian and Madalane, and his wife Susannah. Proprietors of Carolina. Through the researches, some years ago, of Mr. A. S. Salley, Jr., now Secretary of the Historical Commission of South Carolina, the signatures to the oath of allegience of a number of the officers of the province and some of the immigrants of the day were found recorded in one of the record books of the province in the years 1685, 1686, 1688, and 1689. Amongst the signatures of French Huguenot refugees in October, 1685, is that of "D. Trezevant." After more than two centuries, all of these signatures are as plainly legible as though written within the year. There is also recorded in a volume of warrants for lands issued from 1672 to 1692, page 319, the following warrant to Daniel Trezevant, issued October 6, 1685:

Some authorities claim that Theodore and his wife Susannah came with their son and daughter, but the signature of Daniel alone, being attached to the book containing the oath of allegiance, would indicate that his father and mother were left in France, possibly might have died before he immigrated to America. The family tradition is, that Daniel was a merchant at Bordeaux, and brought with him a considerable sum of ready money,—quite an unusual instance in those days. In any event, we find by the records, that at the time of his death in 1726, forty years after he had immigrated to America, he was possessed of what in those days was a considerable fortune, consisting of plantations and slaves.

[9]It is not certain that Elizabeth was a daughter of Theodore and Martha. She might have been a daughter of Isaac and Susannah, but as Theodore Trezevant (7) had a daughter Elizabeth Martha it would seem plausible to suppose that Elizabeth was his sister and that his daughter was named for his two sisters Elizabeth and Martha.

[12]It is not a certainty that this is the Daniel Trezevant who married Mary Blackledge. The marriage of Daniel Trezevant and Mary Blackledge is recorded in the St. Philip's Parish register, but it might have been Daniel Trezevant (9), son of Theodore, who married Mary Blackledge. However, no contemporary accounts of the latter are to be found, while it is certain that the former was a silversmith in Charles Town at that time. On the other hand no record of the death of Elizabeth (Miller) Trezevant, first wife of the former, has been found.

THEODORE TREZEVANT (Theodore,[2] Daniel[1]), born April 20, 1722, to the writer's mind, after a careful consideration of every member of the family, direct and collateral, was the finest and ablest member of the entire family. Through the arbitrary conditions of his grandfather's will, his father was left a poor man and died young when Theodore was only ten years of age. His mother died within a few months of his father; both in 1732. The family tradition is, that the administrator mismanaged the estate and when the plantation was sold in 1739, the children were left penniless, and Theodore was apprenticed to a tailor, and subsequently proved to be a good one. In fact, it seems that whatever he turned his hand to was more or less successful. He was an ardent patriot, and quite naturally contracts for clothing by the State for the militia, and afterwards for the regulars, were placed with him; a statement for which we have abundant testimony in the orders of Council at that time. Starting from the very lowest condition financially, and by force of circumstances thrown on to what was socially a low rung in the ladder, by dint of energy, intelligence and integrity, he emerged triumphant from all difficulties, gave freely of his money and time to the patriot cause; gave a college education to every one of his numerous family of children, and was so highly esteemed that he was one of the thirteen mechanics placed on the committee of thirty-nine (consisting of thirteen planters, thirteen mechanics, and thirteen merchants) formed in Charles Town, Thursday, July 20, 1769, "for the particular purpose of con-

[15]Among those who, in the summer of 1780, petitioned the British Commandant of Charles Town that they were desirous of showing "every mark of allegiance and attachment in their power to his Majesty's person and government" was Daniel Trezevant. (See The Royal South-Carolina Gazette, Thursday, September 21, 1780.) It is possible that this was Daniel (9) son of Theodore, but it is more likely that it was the above Daniel (14) for the same reasons that are given in note 12—no certain records of Daniel (9) have been found beyond his birth record given in the St. Thomas and St. Denis's Parish register.

The death of "Mr. Daniel Trezevant" is also announced in The Gazette of the State of South-Carolina for Monday, October 4, 1784. This also might have been Daniel (9), but again applying the argument of note 12 we assume it to be Daniel (14).

certing and doing whatever might be farther necessary to give Force to the new Association" for the non-importation of European and East India goods and negroes.[16]

He was elected a deputy to the first Provincial Congress of South Carolina from Charles Town (parishes of St. Philip and St. Michael) at the election held January 9, 1775.[17] In this Congress a brother-in-law, Peter Timothy, was also a member, and secretary. We find that subsequently to the Revolution he was still owner of the tailoring establishment, and was president of the Master Tailor's Society in Charleston.[18]

From recitals of the Mesne Conveyance Office, Charleston, S. C., we find in some of the latest of these he is spoken of as Theodore Trezevant, "Gentleman", which indicates that he had then retired from business, from which we deduce that even at that early date the difference between "mechanic" and "gentleman" was somewhat a question of financial standing. In any event, I can safely say that viewed from every angle, Theodore Trezevant, of French Huguenot ancestry, of exceptionally good blood, and tailor by trade until he retired in his old age, was, perhaps, the most striking member of the Trezevant family in America. He was thrown, from fair condition at birth, to the bottom of the ladder, and by his unaided effort reached the top.

He married, May 11, 1749,[19] Elizabeth Wells, who died June 4, 1752;[19] married again, April 24, 1753,[19] Catherine Timothy (born January 17, 1735), daughter of Lewis[20] and Elizabeth Timothy, who died in February (buried 25th), 1764; married again, April 20, 1766, Catherine Crouch[19] (born February 20, 1736), daughter of Abraham and Ann Crouch. He died before sunrise[21] Thursday morning, May 14, 1801.[22] His widow, Mrs. Catherine (Crouch) Trezevant, died September 22, 1820.[23]

September 21, 1731, Palatines, in the Ship Bruton of London, Michael Franklyn, Master, from Rotterdam, last from Cowes (Colonial Records Pennsylvania, Volume III., p. 414): Males over age, amongst others, Lewis Timothee; under 16 years of age, Peter Timothee, Ludwig Timothee, Carl Timothee.

There will be found in Sparks' Biography and Letters of Benjamin Franklin, a letter of his to Peter Timothy, at Charles Town. When Louis Timothée came to Philadelphia, he was employed by Franklin on his paper, and was the first librarian of the Philadelphia Library founded by Benjamin Franklin and a few of his friends. One of Louis Timothée's children was buried in Christ Church burying ground, Philadelphia.

Louis Timothée by the advice of Franklin (it was said) went to Charles Town, S. C., and in 1834 revived a newspaper known as The South-Carolina Gazette, changing the spelling of his name soon after from Louis Timothée to Lewis Timothy. In 1736 he published The Laws of the Province of South Carolina, by Nicholas Trott, the handsomest folio volume issued during the colonial period from an American press. He died at Charles Town in December, 1738. His widow continued the business of printing, and died in April, 1757.

[22]"Died yesterday, Mr. Theodore Trezevant, in the 80th year of his age. He was descended from respectable ancestors, who being exiled from France in consequence of the revocation of the edict of Nantz, settled in St. Thomas's parish, in the infancy of South-Carolina. Though a constant resident in and near Charleston, yet by temperance, exercise, and orderly living, he enjoyed almost uninterrupted health, and was in the daily discharge of the duties of his station, 'till within three days of his death. He was an early active friend to the rights of his native country, which had afforded an asylum to his grand parents when driven from their own. In the early measures which were introductory to our grand struggle for independence, his services were repeatedly called for by our first patriots and never refused. He was the friend of social order and religion, and passed through life, not only without a stain, but in the practice of all the virtues which adorn the man and the christian. In his domestic relations, he was exemplary. Few parents were equally attentive to, and none more successful, in the education of their children. He brought up a large family, all of whom he trained in the ways of wisdom and virtue, and some of whom he had the pleasure of seeing deservedly promoted to offices of the highest importance, and discharging the duties thereof, with honor and dignity."—South-Carolina State Gazette, and Timothy's Daily Advertiser, Friday, May 15, 1801. The Times, Charleston, S. C., published the same sketch on the same day.

His will, made March 3, 1795; proved May 22, 1801, mentions sons Peter and Lewis, daughters Charlotte Cross and Ann Sarah Heyward, sons in law William George Cross and Daniel Heyward, and speaks of his five children and his grandchildren, the children of his daughter, the late Mrs. Martha Thomson. William Henry Crouch was a witness. (Probate Court Records, Charleston County, Book D, p. 174.)

"Peter Trezevant, Only qualified Executor" of Theodore Trezevant, advertised in the South-Carolina State Gazette and Timothy's Daily Advertiser, June 11, 1801, for creditors and debtors of the estate.

Trezevant are requested to attend her Funeral from her Son's residence, in Stoll's-alley, THIS MORNING, at 9 o'clock, without further invitation."—The City Gazette and Commercial Daily Advertiser, September 23, 1820. By the Charleston City Directory of that period he lived in Stoll's Alley, and was discount clerk of the South Carolina Bank.) Year Book, City of Charleston, 1880, p. 316.

St. Philip's Parish register records the burial of Sarah Trezevant, April 14, 1758. She might have been a second child by the first wife, but more likely she was a maiden sister of either Theodore (7) or Daniel (6).

[25]The register of St. Philip's Parish says: "Theodore Trezevant's child buried April 24, 1760." The Bible record gives the date of its death as March, 1760.

[26]On a tombstone in Christ Church yard, Philadelphia, appears the following. "In memory of James Trezevant, of South Carolina, who died June, 1780, aged 20 years. All who knew him, loved him; in every acquaintance he had a mourner."

He was attending college in Philadelphia at the time of his death.

JOHN TREZEVANT (Theodore,[3] Theodore,[2] Daniel[1]), born February 16, 1758; died September 10, 1816; graduated at Princeton, N. J., in 1775, and was a member of the Clariosophic (Literary) Society, as shown by the records of Princeton University. After graduating he studied medicine, but at what college I have not been able to ascertain. He afterward settled in Virginia and was appointed surgeon of the 2nd. Regiment, Virginia Line, Continental Establishment, in 1779, and was captured at the fall of Charles Town, South Carolina, May 12, 1780; [27] was released shortly afterwards; returned to Virginia and served until the close of the war. He married, May 5, 1782, Mrs. Catherine Wyatt (nee Cocke, of Surrey County, Va.) who died. He next married Ann Bell (died October 13, 1820), daughter of Sylvanus and Mary Bell, of Sussex County, Va, where he had settled after his first marriage.

Charleston, S. C.; was first a broker and then a bank clerk in Charleston;[29] died at 21 Brunswick Square Hotel, Brighton, Sussex, England, at 1 o'clock P. M., June 21, 1854, and was buried in one of the catacombs in Lewis Cemetery, near Brighton, Sussex, Saturday, July 1, 1854.[30]

About 1770, Robert and John Farquhar, brothers, left their parents and sisters in Bilbo, Scotland, and went out to battle with the world. Robert came to Charles Town, S. C., and engaged in mercantile pursuits, being for a time senior member of the firm of Farquhar & Smith. John went to India as a cadet in the Bombay establishment, but subsequently removed to Bengal and engaged in mercantile pursuits. Robert Farquhar, who was born in Bilbo, October (bap. 23d.) 1743, married in Charles Town, in 1771, Elizabeth Fagan, daughter of Rev. Mr. Fagan, of the Scotch Church, Charles Town, who died about January 3, 1773, leaving one daughter, Elizabeth Willoughby. In January, 1784, Robert Farquhar was drowned while passing from Charleston to Savannah on a vessel.[31] His little daughter, then in her 12th year, was left to the care of friends in Charleston until her marriage.[32]

[29]He also served for a time as purser in the navy. We find on page 721, General Register of U. S. Navy, by Hammersley (Washington, D. C., 1882), as follows:
"Peter Trezevant, purser, U. S. N., discharged Nov. 18, 1801."

In his will, made April 25, 1783, he mentions his daughter, who, he says, was ten years old December 20, 1782, his father and mother, John and Elizabeth Farquhar, his brother John and sisters Charlotte and Anne. (Probate Court Records, Charleston County.)

John Farquhar, who had gone to India in his youth, had amused himself in his leisure moments by making chemical experiments, and the practical knowledge of chemistry thus acquired accidentally led to the acquisition of a fortune. The gunpowder manufactured at Pultah, in the interior, having been found unsatisfactory, Farquhar was selected by General Cornwallis, then governor-general of Bengal, to inquire into the matter and render his assistance. This proved so valuable that he was made superintendent of the factory, and ultimately became sole contractor to the government. His energy and ability soon acquired for him both wealth and influence, and he won the special confidence and favor of Warren Hastings. When, after reaching middle life, he returned to England he was worth about a half million sterling. He became a partner in the great agency house of Basset, Farquhar & Co. in London, and purchased a share in the famous brewery of Whitbread. His wealth, as it accumulated, was devoted partly to the purchase of estates, but the greater portion was invested in the funds and allowed to increase. In 1822 he purchased Fonthill Abbey from William Beckford, the author of Vathek, and son of Sir William Beckford, reckoned in his day "the richest commoner in England." Beckford had a penchant for spending the money his father had left him and one of his fads was to crown Fonthill Abbey with a grand tower, three hundred feet high. This tower was so hastily constructed that it fell even before it was finished, but it was immediately rebuilt. By all these extravagancies, Beckford so involved his estates that he was obliged to sell Fonthill Abbey, and John Farquhar bought it for £330,000. He occasionally resided there until December, 1825, when Beckford's tower, for the second time, fell to the ground. Shortly after this Farquhar sold Fonthill Abbey. On the 6th of July, 1826, he died suddenly of apoplexy, and his wealth, amounting to about a million and a half pounds, was divided among his seven nephews and nieces.[33] One of the latter, as already shown, was Mrs. Peter Trezevant, of Charleston. At the time the news came of his wife's good fortune, Mr. Trezevant, then in his 59th year, was a bank clerk and resided in Stoll's Alley. He is said to have remarked that he had been poor all his life, but that thereafter he expected to live

[44]John Timothy Trezevant was one of the finest looking, and most fascinating men I have ever met; a brilliant and forceful speaker, an able lawyer and politician. His success in any career would have been sure but for the fact that his big warm heart opened his sympathies and his purse strings to every one who needed.

He lived in Memphis for about fifty years; no man stood higher professionally, or socially, and he left to his children the precious heritage of an unsullied name.

He joined the Confederate Army, and was immediately appointed major in control of the Arsenal Department in the West. Toward the close of the war he was transferred to Charleston, S. C., and was put in control of the arsenal and supplies there until just previously to the fall of Charleston, when he was stationed at Columbia, S. C.

He told me that when he was quite young occurred the Negro Insurrection in Southampton County, Va., and, although he was only seventeen, being a good pensman, he was appointed aide to General Eppy, who called out the militia to suppress the insurgents, and he was probably more familiar with this memorable event than any other person at the time of our conversation. He stated that in one night, Sunday, the negroes, numbering almost one hundred, killed sixty-three men, women, and children, between midnight and 7 o'clock A. M. The whites promptly assembled, and in the sharp battle the negroes were immediately dispersed, many being killed. After they were dispersed, about fifteen or twenty were regularly tried, convicted and hanged.

physician. He was the friend and intimate of all the leading families in Columbia, in which city no man stood higher. He lost one son in the Mexican war, two were killed in the Confederate war, and when Columbia was burned his house was fired by drunken Federal soldiers while he stood by and looked on appealingly, in vain, for the privilege of carrying from the burning building the pictures of those who were dear to him, and who had died years before. All during the hard times of the last year of the war, the old gentleman had his house full, not only of his own children, but grandchildren, and no man in Columbia gave more liberally to charity and to the aid of the many who saw starvation coming in the door during that trying period.

Lewis Cruger Trezevant (Lewis Crouch,[4] Theodore,[3] Theadore,[2] Daniel[1]), was born in Savannah, Ga., June 11, 1804.[53] His father left a will providing that he should be educated at a South Carolina college, and named as executors for the will, Wm. Johnson, Jr., George Cross, Jr., Theodore Gaillard, and John Taylor, of Columbia. Judge William Johnson accepted the guardianship of the child, and after he was graduated at the South Carolina College he studied medicine, and was graduated at the medical college of the University of Pennsylvania. Instead of returning to South Carolina, he was persuaded by his cousin, James Trezevant, to locate in Southhampton County, Virginia. In 1829 he married Maria Cross Trezevant, his cousin, and had by her two children, Anna and George Trezevant, both of whom died in infancy. After her death, he married Elizabeth Marian Cocke, of Portsmouth, Virginia, of one of the old and distinguished Virginia families. They moved to Memphis, Tenn. NATHANIEL MACON TREZEVANT (James,[5] John,[4] Theodore,[3] Theodore,[2] Daniel[1]), was born in 1827, in Virginia. When he was five years of age his father moved his family from Virginia to Tennessee, settling in the suburbs of Memphis. He graduated at Yale College, and studied as a lawyer but did not practice, being a gentleman planter of independent means. He married Amanda Avery, of Memphis, and resided in that city until about 1870 when he moved to California. He sold out his Memphis properties for a handsome fortune which was lost in various enterprises during his residence in California, and he died in 1913 near Memphis.

JOHN POLLARD TREZEVANT (Theodore,[5] John,[4] Theodore,[3] Theodore,[2] Daniel[1]), was born in Petersburg, Va., New Year's Day, 1817; died Wednesday, September 25, 1878, of yellow fever, in Memphis, Tenn. He was sent to Philadelphia to receive a finished mercantile education, and graduated there. In spite of his mercantile knowledge, which was very exact, he was not a successful merchant, having failed in business in 1855-6. He was immediately after that elected Clerk of the County Court of Shelby County, Tenn., and was re-elected continuously to that office by large majorities until the beginning of the Confederate war. He was perhaps the most popular man in Memphis, by reason of his fine intelligence, his great liberality, and his attention to the higher spiritual affairs of life. He was almost an aesthetic in his habits of life, and so devoted a christian in St. Mary's Cathedral, in Memphis, which he was instrumental in building, that his intimate friends always jocularly called him "Saint John"; a truly lovable character from every point of view. He married Louisa Rembert, daughter of James and Sarah Rembert, who had moved from Georgia to Memphis. (The Remberts themselves, like the Trezevants, were descendants of an old Huguenot family, which settled in the central part of South Carolina instead of in Charleston.) They were married at her father's residence, by the Rev. Philip W. Alston, Rector of Calvary Church, December 18, ——. His wife died on May 18, 1856. He entered as private in the Confederate army in the same company with his son, a lad of 16 years, and was badly wounded in the foot at the battle of Shiloh, and was not again in service as a soldier. No man was ever more universally mourned. Among the many encomiums pronounced on his character, none could express more than the words uttered over his grave by his former pastor, the venerable Dr. White, Rector of Calvary Church. In his remarks after the burial service, the reverend gentleman said that John Pollard Trezevant was the most perfect human being he had ever known. He was one of whom it might have been said, as of Nathaniel of old, "Behold a man indeed, in whom is no guile." Always patient, always forbearing, in the performance of duty firm as a rock, exacting and unsparing of himself in all matters both small and great, yet ever ready to make all allowances for others' delinquencies and shortcomings, and to point out and see what was estimable and agreeable in every living being. His faults, if faults he had, "leaned to virtue's side." He was a gentleman of the purest and most cultivated taste, most truly courteous in his manner to all, high and low, rich and poor alike.

James Hamilton Trezevant (Brooks Roberts,[5] John,[4] Theodore,[3] Theodore,[2] Daniel[1]), was born March, 1834; was given a fine education in preparation for his career as a civil engineer, but taught school for a while at Point Coupee College, Louisiana, just as he was grown. In 1856, yielding to the spirit of adventure, he went to "Bleeding Kansas" as one of the Southerners engaged in that little preparatory scrap between the North and the South; was a member of Capt. Dick Murphy's company, of Leavenworth, Kan., which justly, or unjustly, was accused of burning the town of Lawrence, Kas. John Brown was captured at Le Compte, and a guard of eleven was appointed to take charge of him; amongst the eleven was James Hamilton Trezevant, who is today sole survivor of that band. At the time that war was declared between the North and South he was living in Baton Rouge, La. Gen. Braxton Bragg was president of the board of public works, and James Hamilton Trezevant one of the assistant State engineers. On January 8, 1861, he enlisted in the 1st Louisiana Regular State Troops, and was made adjutant of the regiment. His commission as 1st Lieutenant was dated January 9, 1861. A. H. Gladden was colonel of the regiment, and Daniel W. Adams, of Mississippi, lieutenant-colonel. The regiment went to Pensacola, Fla. Within a few weeks James Hamilton Trezevant was promoted to the captaincy of Company D in his regiment. They were ordered to Corinth. On April 7, 1862, about 4 P. M., a canister shot struck him on top of the head, fracturing his skull. The thickness of the patent leather in the top of his cap probably saved his life. He was absent from duty about two months, during which time he married Fannie Davidson (died in 1892), daughter of Thomas Green Davidson, member of Congress from Amite, La. They had one son, who died in infancy.

On October 7, 1862, at the Battle of Perryville, Ky., the day was very hot. He was in his shirt sleeves, and was shot through the right lung, but soon recovered, as the wound healed from first intent. In May, 1897, he was married again, by Bishop Henry Aves, at Christ Church, Houston, Texas, to Bessie Loreta Campbell (born in Huntsville, Walker County, Texas, March 18, 1865). Her father, Judge Robert Giles Cochran Campbell, was born in Wilmington, Del., in 1809; moved to Texas in the early days; was a member of the Texas Legislature in 1847, and was one of the most brilliant lawyers of his day. His wife was Mary Elizabeth Waddill, from Woodville, Miss. They were married in 1853, near Richmond, Texas, where they resided on a plantation for many years. There was no issue by his second marriage.

John Timothée Trezevant (Brooks Roberts,[5] John,[4] Theodore,[3] Theodore,[2] Daniel[1]), was born October 18, 1842; was a student at the Shelby Male Academy, near Memphis, preparing for the profession of civil engineer, when his father died in 1856. In 1857 he secured a position as assistant engineer on construction of the Memphis and Ohio Railroad. Pursuing his studies at night, he rapidly acquired a mastery of his profession, and was engaged in building the Little Rock and Memphis Railway, when in April, 1861, he resigned his position and joined the Confederate Army as a private in Company A (Shelby Greys), Memphis, Tenn., which company became a part of the Fourth Tennessee Infantry. He was desperately wounded at the battle of Shiloh, being confined to his bed for nearly a year and on crutches for a year after; was discharged for disabilities due to these wounds. On recovering he again joined the service in 1864, as a lieutenant of engineers, assigned to the First Foreign Battalion. At the close of the war he was paroled at Greensboro, N. C., being at that time first lieutenant, acting captain. For two years after the war he was engaged as a clerk in a wholesale agricultural implement house at Memphis, Tenn. At the end of that time he became general agent for the Carolina Life Insurance Company, for the West, of which company Jefferson Davis, ex-president of the Confederate States, was president. His headquarters were in Little Rock, Ark. In 1872 he retired from the life insurance business and then began his life work as a fire insurance manager. In 1876 he moved to Dallas, Texas, as manager for the Southwest of several leading fire insurance companies, and has been continuously in that business to this date. About seven years ago, at the age of sixty-five, he began to get out of harness, and is now practically retired, being no longer actively engaged in business. He married December 12, 1866, May Hullum, of Memphis, Tenn. By this marriage there was one child which lived but a few days, a daughter, May Trezevant. Mrs. May Hullum Trezevant died in 1879. He married again, in June, 1881, Mary Lackland, of St. Louis, Mo. They separated in 1889, and were finally divorced in 1892, having had no issue. August 14, 1893, he married Eva Whitthorne (born November 29, 1865), of Little Rock, Arkansas. By this marriage there is one daughter, Eva Whitthorne Trezevant. On February 28, 1905, Mrs. Eva Whitthorne Trezevant died suddenly of blood-poisoning.

She was a most brilliant member of a most brilliant family. Left an orphan when she was young, she lived with her uncle, Judge William Ratcliffe, of Little Rock, Ark., where she was educated and was valedictorian of her class. The bent of her inclination was toward literature, and she promptly began preparing herself for a literary career by extensive reading. With a wonderfully retentive memory, she acquired, in a few years, an unusual and very wide education in general literature. Her first book, In Maiden Meditation, was printed when she was twenty-five, and met with prompt recognition as a charming volume. Two years after that, in August, 1893, she married J. T. Trezevant. A born social leader, she turned her attention to those things which are best in social life—the management and education of her daughter, and the building of a home and social circle for that daughter's future benefit. In 1904, the call of literature was strong and she was preparing to again enter the field of literature when she died suddenly, on February 28, 1905.[54]

[54]William Jervis Whitthorne, her grandfather, was born in Dublin, Ireland. His father Irish, his mother of French Huguenot family (De La Honte). He moved from Dublin to Tennessee, where he married Eliza Joice Wisener, daughter of a wealthy Bedford County planter. He died in Shelbyville, Tenn., February 19, 1872. They had thirteen children, ten boys and three girls. He, himself, was noted for his strict Presbyterianism, democracy, honesty and integrity. He accumulated quite a fortune for those days, and was a personal friend of General Jackson and President Polk.

His son, Andrew Jackson Whitthorne, was born at Farmington, Marshall County, Tenn., October 1, 1837; was a graduate of the University of Nashville, Tenn., and the Louisville, Ky., Medical College; died at Pulaski, Tenn., September 7, 1871; and married at Camden, Ark., his wife being Eva Ratcliffe (born August 6, 1840;

On June 14, 1911, he again married, Mrs. John R. Redfield, widow of a prominent banker of Hartford, Conn. Before marriage she was Miss Caroline Tuttle, of Brooklyn, N. Y. They are now living at the family home in Dallas, Texas. This city has been Mr. Trezevant's residence for thirty-eight years, during which time he has seen it grow from a small town of 6,000 inhabitants to a population of 130,000. Outside of his principal business of fire insurance, he has been actively engaged in the many directions, social and financial, which present themselves to a business man in a growing city like Dallas, with the result, due more to environment than any special business acumen, that he has been able to retire with a comfortable competence.

[3]January 12, 1762, "Peter Bostock Master and Commander of the Ship Duke of York now in the harbour of Charles Town" declared that in or about 1754 he delivered to William Burrows certain bonds and a negro girl in trust, in accordance with an agreement between himself and William Burrows, Rev. Alexander Garden and John Rattray, for "Martha Bostock now Martha Parsons Wife of Samuel Parsons of the City of London in the Kingdom of Great Britain Gent. during her Life for the Use & Maintenance of her the said Martha & of Mary Parsons Bostock my Child by her And after the Death of the said Martha to the said Mary during her Life", and the Rev. Alexander Garden and John Rattray having died he now agreed to have the trust conveyed to John Guerard, Henry Laurens and Thomas Smith, the elder, of Broad Street, merchant, in conjunction with William Burrows. His will, made April 1, 1768, proved April 22, 1768, mentions his wife Susannah and his eight children here named. Wife Susannah, Thomas Hall, Ebenezer Simmons and George Sheed, executors. (Probate Court records, Charleston County, Book 1761-77, p. 215. The tombstone over his grave in St. Philip's churchyard gives the date of his death as May 12, 1767, which is manifestly incorrect. His family Bible gives the date of his birth as 1723. His tombstone gives his age at death as 45, which also proves that May 12, 1767, is wrong. An advertisement from his executors appears in The South-Carolina Gazette, June 27, 1768. St. Philip's Parish register gives date of burial as April 11, 1768.

THOMAS HALL JERVEY was born September 26, 1778. He followed the sea; was sometime chief mate of the schooner Galliot, Capt. Hauser, which sailed from New York for Gibralter about the first of September, 1798. A severe squall struck the boat in latitude 39, 57 on the evening of Friday, the 7th, and overset it, the survivors of the crew scrambling up the weather side and getting upon her bottom. The next day the survivors got into one of the schooner's boats, but without oars or provisions. For five days they drifted or paddled with pieces of driftwood about the wreck, occasionally getting something to eat from the vessel and endeavoring to right her, but seeing that she could not be righted, and was fast settling, they determined on Thursday, the 13th, to try for land in the small boat. A sail was made out of the schooner's studding sail, and with a gentle breeze ran to the westward, being then in latitude 38.57, and on Friday, the 14th, at 12 o'clock, were picked up by the brig Apollo of and from New York to Cadiz. On the Apollo's entering Cadiz she was brought to by the British ship-of-war Edgar, of 74 guns, and Mate Jervey and all the men who had just been saved from the wreck, being unable to show their certificates of citizenship, which had been lost on their vessel, were impressed as British seamen. They were subsequently released and returned to America[6]. He was for a time captain of the Saucy Jack, a privateer sent out by citizens of Charleston during the war of 1812, and his log book is now in the hands of descendants.

He married, May 6, 1802, Floride Taylor[7], who died November 3, 1802, of consumption[8]. He next married, September 15, 1805, Paulina Maria Henrietta Changuion, daughter of the governor of the island of Curacoa[9]; died March 11, 1846[10]. His widow

"We announce with regret the death of our estimable fellow-citizen, JAMES JERVEY, Esq., President of the State Bank. He expired at one o'clock yesterday, after a long period of feeble health, though confined to his house but a few days before his death.

Mr. JERVEY had lived a life of usefulness and was universally esteemed."—The Charleston Mercury, Thursday, April 3, 1845. See the same paper for April 5th.

"Death of James Jervey, Esq.—The mortal remains of JAMES JERVEY, Esq., were interred, yesterday, in the Cemetery of St. Michael's Church, the regrets of our whole community mingling with those of his bereaved and mourning family, at the loss of such a worthy citizen and estimable man. He had been laboring, for some time under bodily indisposition, and expired on Wednesday, last, having fulfilled the age of three score years. Mr. JERVEY was a man of intelligent mind, and benevolent disposition, remarkable for the courtesy and urbanity of his manners, and beloved and esteemed by all who knew him. His life was one of honorable and active usefulness, distinguished by fidelity in the discharge of all private and social responsibilities. He was the depositary of many private and public trusts. For a number of years he was Clerk of the Federal Courts in this State, and was looked up to as an oracle in the practice of those tribunals. As Chairman of the Commissioners of the Orphan House, he served for about ten years, and carefully administered the affairs of that noble charity; and, for perhaps an equally extended period, he further promoted the cause of benevolence, as Steward or presiding officer of the South-Carolina Society. He retired from his Clerkship, on his election to the office of President of the State Bank in this city, which he continued to fill with ability and integrity to the day of his death. In addition to his numerous secular trusts, the care of the interests of religion, in a measure, devolved on him, as chairman of the Vestry of St. Michael's Church. We held him in high estimation during his life, and record our just tribute to his memory now that he is numbered with the dead."—The Charleston Courier, Friday, April 4, 1845.

May 8, 1786; captain U. S. A.; M. C. from the Charleston district, January 6, 1823, to March 4, 1829[2]; governor of South Carolina 1830-32; brigadier-general 4th Brigade, composed of the troops of Charleston, South Carolina militia, 1832-35, commanding during the Nullification excitement of 1832-3. He moved to Texas, and was then offered the position of commander of the army of the newly formed republic of Texas, which he declined. After further negotiations he was sent by the president of the republic of Texas, as its financial representative, to the various courts and financial centres of Europe, in the hope of securing a large loan of $5,000,000.00 in order to aid in the rehabilitating of the impoverished little republic. He was two or three years in Europe, but succeeded, finally, in securing the loan and returned to Texas. He was United States Senator from Texas at the time of his death, November 15, 1857, when the Galveston and Opelousas collided off the coast of Texas and he was drowned after having given up his life preserver to a lady[3]. x
